

SELF-AWARENESS

Humna Alam, Borna Afkhami-Rohani, Serine Ashfour & Damian Aguilar

Self-Awareness

Definition

Having a clear perception of own consciousness of your internal thoughts and feelings and how those can impact your actions and decisions.

Importance

- Make better decisions
- Build stronger relationships
- Conflict management

Statistics

A study of 486 companies over 30 months found that organizations with a higher percentage of self-aware leaders outperformed organizations with a lower percentage. (According to a study done by Korn Ferry)

Our Scenario

You are on the senior hiring team at Nike. Your team is looking for a new manager for the product development department. What actions would you take to ensure the person hired is the correct fit for managing their dept. and team? How would you specifically ensure they are “self-aware”, as stated above?

Success/Fail

DO:

- One should be truthful and self-aware about their past
- Engaging in active listening throughout the interview
- Clear Communication is also important and effective.
- Putting yourself in other colleagues shoes

DON'T:

- If one brings up their past challenges and mistakes, but doesn't show how they learned from it and improved
- Don't have a rigid mindset in ways of not being flexible to try new things
- Don't be self centered and only focusing on how this position will fulfill your goals
- Not reflecting on their own role and how they could have done things differently

SOLUTION

1. Introduce

Introduce myself with my job position and a fun fact about myself then ask them to introduce themselves

2. Strength & Weakness

Assess awareness based on question. Seeking how introspective they get with these answers, and is there weakness a genuine weakness.

3. Get Technical

As the icebreaker questions are out of the way, it's a good time to assess technical aspect

4. Situational

We want to see if they can empathize with their friend and comfort them based on what their friend needs, not by centering themselves.

5. How'd it Go?

If they are able to reflect thoroughly at themselves then it shows good self awareness.

WHY IT WOULD WORK

- Psychological standpoint to those questions (no right or wrong answer)
- It takes social awareness to answer those questions
- Allows a person to think deeply about the question

NIKE

JUST DO IT.

